Week in Review:

- Equities had a strong week last week as U.S. and China trade tensions eased up after comments made by China's officials showed a softening in the tone of their rhetoric. Both sides have stated that they want to proceed with negotiations and to work out a deal.
- The German economy contracted in the second quarter as output fell 0.1% from the previous three months. The export-heavy manufacturing sector has been facing headwinds from the China-US trade war, the looming chaos of Brexit, and turmoil in the car making industry. Europe's largest economy now faces the threat of recession and a prolonged economic slowdown.
- Phillip Morris International and Altria, which split up in 2008, are now exploring a merger amid struggling tobacco sales and a changing marketplace. The combined company would have a market value of approximately $200 billion if they can convince investors to accept the all-share combination. Both companies shares traded lower after the announcement indicating that investors in both companies aren't sold on the deal.
